Financial Markets Regulatory Roundtable—Sixth in a Series

Treasury's Financial Stability Plan and Framework for Financial Regulatory Reform: An Overview and Update on Key Programs

Speakers: A. Patrick Doyle, Partner, Co-Chair, Financial Services Practice, Arnold & Porter, New York
Kevin F. Barnard, Partner, Co-Chair, Financial Services Practice, Arnold & Porter, New York
Alan W. Avery, Partner, Financial Services Practice, Arnold & Porter, New York
Kathleen A. Scott, Counsel, Financial Services Practice, Arnold & Porter, New York

On February 10, 2009, Treasury Secretary Timothy Geithner announced a comprehensive Financial Stability Plan (FSP) designed to stabilize and repair the US financial system, support the flow of credit necessary for recovery, and, through a series of initiatives, attack the current credit crisis on all fronts. On March 26, 2009, Secretary Geithner outlined the Obama Administration's framework for comprehensive financial regulatory reform. In this roundtable, our attorneys will assess some of the key programs of the FSP, and we will take a look at the framework for regulatory reform. Areas we will cover include:

- The Financial Stability Trust program, which builds on the TARP program by requiring stress tests for banks and thrifts and providing access to additional capital under the CAP program
- The efforts under the TALF program to restart the securitization markets for certain consumer and business lending
- The new Public-Private Investment Program (PPIP), designed to address the challenge of troubled loans and illiquid mortgage-backed securities currently held by banks and thrifts
- The principal components of the financial regulatory reform plan, including efforts to address systemic risk

We will be conducting monthly Financial Markets Regulatory Roundtables over the next few months, or longer, as significant new developments of interest to the financial services community arise. Given the rapidly-changing world of financial markets and institutions, topics and dates will be dictated by events and developments in the industry and in Washington and will be announced.
